

Bill Reynolds

I grew up in Baltimore County and went to Towson High School. I graduated from Dartmouth College in 1967 and Harvard Law School in 1970. After graduation, I clerked for federal district judge Frank A. Kaufman in Baltimore, and I began teaching at Maryland

Carey School of Law in 1971. I retired from Maryland in 2014 as the Jacob A France Professor Emeritus. Among the many courses, I taught were Antitrust, Art Law, Conflict of Laws, Constitutional Law, Contracts, EU Law, and Legal Process. My primary fields of scholarship were in Conflict of Laws, Legal History, and Legal Process.

I have written five books, most in multiple editions, and numerous articles in law reviews, including the Chicago, Columbia, Cornell, Duke, and Maryland Law Reviews, as well as the American Journal of Comparative Law

I also served as Of Counsel to several law firms, most recently DLA Piper. I specialized in appellate litigation.

My wife Teddy taught math at Roland Park Country School for 36 years. We have three children and four grandchildren.

I am a former sailor who loves to travel, read history, and classic detective stories. I am a life-long local sports fan who saw the first Orioles game in 1954 and The Greatest Game Ever Played in 1958.
